

A Good Shepherd Day reflection...

We are all Good Shepherd. We are a living tapestry with thousands of threads of passions woven together creating who we are today.

We are all Good Shepherd. We are a living tapestry with thousands of threads of passions woven together creating who we are today.

We are a work in progress; never fully complete, yet woven within the framework of justice, compassion, reconciliation, audacity and daring begun here in 1863 and still strong today.

We are local and we are International.

We are weaving Good Shepherd today: Australia 2009

There are many of us: Marcia who has sat with many a worker and helped them to keep going, or Michael who always speaks boldly and without compromise when he is championing for the justice of others; Tania, working quietly in migration giving hope and help, Rosie who writes the stories we all take heart and courage from, Jeanette who patiently works with our older sisters to hold and treasure our history, Noelene who champions tirelessly for the oppressed in Kings Cross. We are in St Kilda, and we are in Perth, we are in trading circles and justice workshops, we walk with asylum seekers, and victims of domestic violence. We are so many expression of the same spirit that our colours create a weaving that is rich and vibrant. We are tradition of justice, and we are looking for innovation to give justice new life...

We are so many threads and fibres of different colours, textures, and lengths. This Good Shepherd Day, find a space to share some of the stories of the threads around you, and add them to the beginning of the reflection above. Name people and work... in their part of gs... and join them up to help make a Good Shepherd Day thread picture

Share them with Jacinta email: goodshepherd@justiceworks.com.au and they can go on the website for us all to share!
